Electricity Code review 2019 to 2022

Publication of draft decision

The Economic Regulation Authority has published its draft decision to repeal and replace the Code of Conduct for the Supply of Electricity to Small use Customers 2018. The ERA's decision follows its consideration of the Electricity Code Consultative Committee's (ECCC) Final Review Report: 2019-22 Review of the Code of Conduct for the Supply of Electricity to Small Use Customers.

The ERA will now refer the proposed replacement Code back to the ECCC for further advice. The ECCC will undertake public consultation before it provides its advice. The ERA will take into consideration the advice it receives from the ECCC regarding the proposed amendments when making its final decision about these amendments.

Further information on the proposed changes to the Code is available in the media statement.

Background

The ECCC is a statutory committee established by the ERA to advise it on matters relating to the Code of Conduct for the Supply of Electricity to Small Use Customers. The ECCC must carry out a review of the Code every two years.

The ECCC consists of four industry members, four members from consumer representative organisations, two government agency representatives and a non-voting chairperson and executive officer.¹
